PROGRAM OVERVIEW

Prerequisites

The program begins with classroom instruction of course material dedicated to medical terminology, anatomy and physiology, psychology, growth and development, nutrition, and pharmacology.

Term I: Foundations of Nursing

The first term combines theory, lab and clinical experience. Topics covered include communicable diseases, communications, patient education, nursing fundamentals, gerontology nursing, rehabilitation nursing, and the nursing process. Clinical rotations begin in Term I and continue through Term IV.

Term II: Medical-Surgical Nursing (Level I)

In Term II, students enter the first level of medical-surgical nursing. Students obtain knowledge in common diseases, diagnostic procedures, related pharmacological agents, and specific nutritional needs for the GI tract, lymphatic system, cardiovascular system, respiratory system, as well as the urinary system.

Term III: Medical-Surgical Nursing (Level II)

This term students enter the second level of medical-surgical nursing. The curriculum focuses on care of the surgical patient, HIV and AIDS, oncology, endocrine disorders, reproductive disorders, sensory disorders, and neurological disorders.

Term IV: Maternity, Pediatrics, Leadership and Supervision

In the final term of the program, students focus on maternity and pediatrics, as well as the importance of great leadership and different managerial styles. The unit includes physiology of conception, anatomical and physiological changes during pregnancy, labor and delivery, the post-partum period, fetal development, complications of pregnancy, disorders of the newborn, stages of growth and development, common childhood diseases, and common pediatric procedures.

NCLEX-PN® Review

In the final section of the program, students are provided with an NCLEX-PN review course to prepare and empower them before taking the NCLEX-PN. During this course, students review what they have learned throughout the program by taking hundreds of practice questions modeled after the NCLEX-PN.
